

I don't think there is too much violence in TV. I grew up during the late 60's and 70's. I missed all those Westerns like 'Gunsmoke', military shows like '12 O'Clock High' and spy shows like 'Man from UNCLE'. Now, I detested wars and believed in banning the public from owning guns like in Japan. Kids learned their behaviors from their friends and adults. Parents should not use the TV as a baby-sitting device if they are worried about their kids' behavior. Parents should pay attention to who their kids' friends are. Parents should also pay attention to the kind of sport events that their kids participate in that does not promote good sportsmanship, but rather violence as the only way to win the game. I am single without children.
